The Time Is at Hand The New Day Dawns

"HE THAT SAT UPON THE THRONE SAID, BEHOLD, I MAKE ALL THINGS NEW."

The Night of Sin Is Passing—Morning Has Come—Awake from Nocturnal Hallucinations—Evidences that the Day Is Here—Meaning of Modern Improvements, Educational Facilities, and Progress in All Directions—God's Blessings Increase Discontent—Humanity About to Learn a Great Lesson Respecting Their Fallen Condition—The Result Glorious.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 14.—Pastor Russell is reported to have addressed the text, "At the close of the world shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of him that sitteth upon the throne," in the following manner:

For six great days of a thousand years ago, the world has experienced a reign of sin and death. The knowledge of sin and death has been made to effect a cure, and now the world is about to be made new.

The creeds of the Dark Ages did indeed give us the message of the New Day. They distorted it and made it a message of eternal torture, whereas the Scriptures declare that "the wages of sin is death."

Our blessed time is now drawing near. The message of the New Day is being proclaimed to every class. We may indeed rejoice in the day which is dawning in these blessed times.

Our blessings thus far are not drawing near. The message of the New Day is being proclaimed to every class. We may indeed rejoice in the day which is dawning in these blessed times.

THE MARRIED LIFE OF HELEN AND WARREN By MABEL HERBERT URNER, Originator of "Their Married Life," Author of "The Journal of a Neglected Wife," "The Woman Alone," Etc.

Helen by a Subterfuge Wins Her Point and Avoids Quarrel with Warren.

That was what she had heard! Helen flew out to the kitchen, expecting to see it in flames, but there was only a dense smoke and a stifling smell of gas.

"It was a faint, furtive knock—the knock of the maid from across the hall. Emma closed the icebox noisily and pretended not to hear.

"Isn't that some one at the door?" Helen, who was sitting at the mayonnaise from the fork to test its smoothness.

"No, ma'am, I guess it's the wind," as she opened the door and evidently signaled the girl to go away.

For a second Helen was tempted to rush to the door, fling it open and confront Emma with her lips blue with cold and her hair down, it was not an opportune time for a scene.

Besides, Emma's mouth was up to the twentieth, and Helen had already told her to look for another place. She could no longer put up with her.

"How'd this happen?" she quickly examined the singed hair and eyebrows. Then, turning to Helen, "We'd better have a doctor here."

"Oh, no, sir, I'm all right; I don't need a doctor," protested Emma. "I hardly think she does, dear."

"You stay here with her—I'll go," Warren strode to the door. "Mrs. Warren is in any emergency was always most capable, and now she came hurrying out, anxious to help."

"What're you using—cold cream? I think olive oil's much better." Helen looked at the girl and Mrs. Stevens, ripping off her long, white gloves, rubbed it gently over Emma's soot-smudged face.

"Because of her aversion for the girl, and the feeling that she was not overjoyed to see her, Mrs. Stevens, rubbing it gently over Emma's soot-smudged face.

"Never mind, I'll get mine," knowing she could never use it afterward. Emma's hair was oily and flaked off. It could not be the Stevenses' hair, it was now being in the time when Warren had not come yet.

"Again the bell, a clamorous peal. Where was Emma? Why did she not answer it? Had she dared to go over to the kitchen?"

"Throwing on a kimono, Helen ran out to the hall. The Stevenses would not ring like that! Standing back of the door, she opened it a few inches.

"A glimpse of Emma's white apron—she had been in the kitchen and had been rinsed her hands under the faucet. How about going out for dinner?"

"Nonsense!" laughed Mrs. Stevens. "You and Henry stay in there—we'll serve the dinner in no time."

"They found the kitchen freezing cold from the open window, but the smoke had all blown out. Except for broiling the chicken and the sauce for the cauliflower, everything was ready."

"In less than half an hour they had dinner on the table. "Wonder there's not more accidents with these gas stoves," commented Mrs. Stevens as they sat down. "Lucky it didn't burn her face."

"She must have turned on the oven before she lit the match," frowned Warren. "Mighty dangerous thing to do."

"I've warned her about that repeatedly," Helen was scornful. "But her mind's not on her work—she's thinking of those elevator boys."

"I don't quite like her eyes," mused Mrs. Stevens, taking off one of Emma's aprons. "She doesn't look straight ahead."

"That's part of her furtiveness. Oh, she's the slyest thing! I never know when she's telling the truth—and she's dishonest, too! When her month's up, I'll have to let her—"

"You can't let her go now," broke in Warren, rising to get a girl in a white apron who had come in from the top of an accident like Warren's. "But, dear, I've already told her. She expects to go the twentieth."

"Don't care what you told her—we're going to keep her another two weeks." "Perhaps it was Mrs. Stevens' presence that gave Helen unvented courage, for she asserted with a show of firmness: "They'll pay for her for two weeks—and do the work myself."

"You'll do nothing of the sort! The girl'll stay right here and do the work until she is shape to take another job." Then with a shrug he turned to Mrs. Stevens. "You see a sample of Helen's obstinacy."

"It's not obstinacy," hotly. "It's simply that Emma's so dishonest we shouldn't keep her. At first she took only my perfume and a few ribbons, but yesterday I found one of your ties—"

"What's that?" brusquely. "One of my ties?" "It was under the paper in her bottom drawer." "I've never seen it was! A good tie?"
