NO EVIDENCE TO HOLD ACCUSED Emil Riu of Laurel Glen, North Stonington, Discharged After Lengthy Court Hearing—Boys Threw Stones Against Barn and He shot Off Gun to Scare Them.

Before Justice of the Peace Charles Chapman of North Stonington in the town hall at Milltown on Tuesday the continued case of the state against Emil Riu of Laurel Glen, North Stonington, was tried.

The testimony showed that these boys on the morning of Sept. 24 were on the Van Karlsburg property, throwing stones, some of which struck the side of the barn where the accused and his brother and little boy three years old were standing. Riu warned the boys to stop, and when they refused he sent his brother into the house near by to get an old muzzle-loading double barreled shotgun, one barrel of which was loaded with small amount of powder and paper wadding.

Riu took the gun and fired it off into the air to scare the boys, who thereupon retreated, and soon after Von Karlsburg made complaint and Riu was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Broughton of Stonington.

At the hearing Tuesday a large plan of the farm pasture the trouble took place was laid in evidence, and after a hearing that lasted some three hours Justice Chapman denied the request of Riu's counsel representing the state that the accused be bound over to the superior court and discharged him, stating that there was no evidence on which to hold the accused for the higher court.

Attorney Allyn L. Brown of the firm of Brown & Perkins of this city appeared for the accused.

HOW E. C. STEADMAN'S LOVE LETTER WAS RECEIVED Contest for the Hand of Miss Woodworth, Who Later Became His Wife.

In a series of "famous love letters" published in the Boston Post, the following is the letter which was received inasmuch as it concerns former men of prominence here, and Norwich is the scene of the contest:

An interesting love story is that of Edmund Clarence Steadman, the American poet and critic, and Miss Laura Woodworth. When Mr. Steadman came from college he began writing for the Norwich Tribune. In the printing office of the paper was a young girl, a slender, petite, daintily rounded, young girl, with black hair, large hazel eyes, and an unusually fine complexion, used to trip modestly in and out to speak with her brother.

The glowing beauty of Miss Woodworth caught the alert eye of the chief editor of the paper, who was then Charles E. Platt, the two having purchased the paper on Nov. 17, 1882.

When the partners discovered that they were both in love with the charming Laura Woodworth, they sent her a joint letter requesting that she make a choice between them, each inclosing an individual letter and the one she would return to understand such action as a rejection.

This is the letter "Miss Woody," as she was called by her admirers, retained: "Dear Laura—I cannot refrain from once calling you dear, when I think that it may be the last and only time I shall be allowed to do so. You have read the joint letter of Mr. Platt and myself. It remains for me to say a word to you.

"And if in that word I had the power to throw the most tender affection and love—love that has grown upon me every day since my life has been cheered by your presence, if I could breathe into that word a willingness to devote a lifetime to your happiness and to cling to you and shelter you through all joy and sorrow, I should do no more than reveal to you the earnest passion which is beating at my heart.

"And yet, I fear that I have but little hope. You can hardly know me, you know but little of my past life or my future prospects. And Mr. Platt would tell you that I am a flimsy man and will always be kind and tender to you. I feel his worth, and fear that my chance is small for your favor. But dear Laura, if you can love me for myself, and for my love for you, I offer you my whole heart and hand. And if fervent attachment, and a sincere pride in the possession of you, can make you happy, I pledge them to you. You know this. I am ambitious. I need some dear one for whom to strive, and at whose feet I can lay all the laurels that I may win.

"I almost dread to send this fearing that it will be returned to me. I want you to know me longer and better, but it is necessary, as you will readily understand, for me to speak at once. There are many things I would like to tell you in relation to the future, and to our mutual lives, were I so presuming as to be sanguine of success. As it is, I can only say again—dear Laura, can you love me? In any case I shall ever be.

"Your most devoted friend, "EDMUND C. STEADMAN." Steadman and Laura Woodworth were married on Nov. 3, 1883, in a quiet, a town in the outskirts of Norwich.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD? Speaker for the International Bible Students' Association Answers the Question.

Sunday afternoon at the Davis lecture before an audience of about 250 Pastor J. F. Stephenson of New York would answer the question "Where Are the Dead?" in the address he gave under the auspices of the local branch of the International Bible Students' association.

After the singing of several hymns, the speaker was introduced by W. H. Pickering of Providence, who conducted the meeting when it opened. Pastor Stephenson declared that it was his belief that it was not necessary to learn from the dead where they are, but this could be learned from the Word. He reviewed the answers which are given to the question, none of them seeming to be perfectly satisfactory, he said. Science tells us that man is an animal and death is the end of all. When we realize the high possibilities of man this seems hardly satisfactory. The agnostic and the infidel give answer that we do not know. The answer of the heathen world is in the theory of the transmigration of souls. In the realm of Christendom there are varying answers. The Catholic declares that the dead are found in three places, heaven, hell and purgatory. The Protestant belief eliminates purgatory and leaves heaven and hell. These still are not satisfactory answers, the speaker said.

He quoted Scripture to show that God had given man a presence above the beasts in the fact that God had provided resurrection of the dead. The Scripture, he said, tells us that the dead are asleep, and neither in a place of torment nor in a happy condition, but asleep awaiting the resurrection when all shall hear the voice of the Lord. He used the raising of Lazarus by Jesus to illustrate the argument of his address and quoted from Revelations where it is stated that the keys of death and the grave are given to let loose all the prisoners. At that day, the pastor said, there is meant to be a universal opportunity for salvation, which if one has not grasped in this day he will have opportunity in the day of resurrection.

The local branch of the Bible Students' association has been organized about a year and holds its meetings on Sunday mornings in Room 6, in the Edinboro, the speaker invited his hearers to investigate their method of Bible study by which the Scriptures had been made very plain to him.

MACDONALD SPEAKING FOR GOOD ROADS. Former Connecticut Highway Commissioner Touring in Pennsylvania.

One of the speakers at a good roads meeting in Towanda, Pa., last Thursday night was James H. Macdonald, former Connecticut state highway commissioner. The Towanda Daily Review says:

Hon. James H. Macdonald, for 17 years state highway commissioner of Connecticut, and for years president of the American Good Roads association, and undoubtedly one of the country, was the principal speaker of the evening, being introduced by Chairman McFadden.

Mr. Macdonald, who is a member of the range, is traveling through Pennsylvania speaking every afternoon and evening on the subject of roads and how to obtain them. He knows the subject well, having been a road builder all his life, and expects to spend the rest of his days preaching the gospel of improved highways. Not only is he a leading enthusiastic disbeliever of good roads, but he is also one of the most eloquent and impressive speakers ever heard in Towanda.

He compared Pennsylvania from a good roads standpoint and made the old Keystone state look ridiculous. Notwithstanding the fact that Connecticut is only a dot on the map, and that its population is only a fraction of that of Pennsylvania, he told how Connecticut secured many miles of improved roads, and that was through the liberal expenditure of money and the carrying out of carefully prepared plans, which took several years to perfect.

Mr. Macdonald made an eloquent appeal to the voters to follow the bent of the intelligence and make it possible for Pennsylvania to take a great step forward in the matter of improved highways.

"Let the farmers remember," said Mr. Macdonald, "that their farms are all in their banks, really, and that the keys to such banks are the highways which can be used to travel on for business and pleasure 365 days each year."

His address was not only eloquent, but masterly, and his command of language and ability to expound facts in a clear and logical manner greatly impressed all within range of his voice.

At the conclusion of his address he was given a rising vote of thanks.
